Texas Cooking Class is an internet based education information resource. Site visitors to TexasCookingClass.com can research culinary arts careers and chef career training choices available in Texas cities.

(NewsWire.net -- September 17, 2013) Austin, TX --

Texas Cooking Class, an online culinary education and career training resource, is now open to the public.

The TexasCookingClass.com website is designed to help out individuals who are interested in pursuing a career in the culinary arts. The site discusses culinary industry jobs, possible career paths, the typical training and education needed to obtain these types of positions, and provides a list of schools and education centers where students could start their culinary training.

"Our new website is a pretty great way for anyone in the state of Texas who is considering a culinary arts career to find out a little bit more about what the jobs are really like and how someone can get started," says website manager Kimberly Kohler.

The TexasCookingClass.com site examines culinary career options and recommends some of the preferred education avenues for students to take in order to get their first job in the culinary industry. The site mentions that while there are a few online options available for prospective students, the vast majority of training is conducted in the typical culinary arts campus classroom.

"A person can learn some things by watching an instructional video on their computer," Kohler said, "But in order to learn the fundamental skills that working chefs use every day, those skills can only be learned in the school's kitchen and through daily repetition by the student."

Kohler mentioned that their website is free for any visitor to use and that you don't have to be a resident of Texas to use it.

"If someone thinks they may have a strong interest in cooking as a career, the process of taking one or two cooking classes should be enough to let them know whether or not this actually is a good career for them," Kohler concluded.
