(Newswire.net -- September 24, 2015) Provo, UT -- Seniors are often faced with challenges, many of which include simple day to day activities that were once completed with ease. Making the move to a senior living community can be a positive change for seniors who may find themselves needing a little extra help, as well as for the family members who care about them.

At Courtyard Assisted Living, their caring staff has the goal of allowing their residents to maintain as much independence as possible, while providing them with help with the daily activities that may have become a challenge for them.

Sharon Westfield, Registered Nurse at Courtyard Assisted Living says, "We care for our residents just as we would an aging member of our own family. We help them manage their medications, as well as provide assistance with laundry, the restroom, showering, dressing, and just providing compassionate care and friendship."

In addition to these helpful services, their stay at Courtyard Assisted Living also includes three delicious and nutritious meals a day, housekeeping services, scheduled transportation, and a variety of fun activities.

Should it become necessary, they also have a dedicated memory care wing for those patients with Alzheimer's and dementia. Years of experience have taught the Courtyard team that transitioning into a memory care facility is much easier when it's within the same community that the patient is already familiar with. That's why it's so nice that Courtyard Assisted Living has this priceless resource right on site. Residents are happy with the peace of mind they get knowing that, should they ever need additional memory care services, they won't have to move again. This not only brings comfort to residents, but to their families who know that they are safe, and cared for. Everything they need is right here within the Courtyard Assisted Living community.
