Nicholas Gonzalez, M.D., is inviting anyone who wishes to learn more about his nutritional regimen to view his new video website, www.NicholasGonzalezMD.com.

(Newswire.net -- September 26, 2013) New York City, New York -- Dr. Gonzalez’s new site has been designed to provide visitors with an opportunity to view a multitude of interviews with Dr. Gonzalez in which he explains the practicalities of his treatment, and the theory and evidence behind it. He also discusses his thoughts about the origins of cancer.

The site features an interview with Dr. Joseph Mercola about the cancer and death of Steve Jobs, an NBC Dateline interview in which Suzanne Somers explains why she decided to feature Dr. Gonzalez in her best-selling book “Knockout,” as well as numerous videos where Dr. Gonzalez discusses his nutritional approach.

Created with the viewer experience in mind, the video site has been designed for simplicity so the visitor can quickly locate a video that pertains to his or her interests. Once the site opens the visitor can easily scroll down the homepage and see all the videos that are available, at one glance.

“This new website offers an opportunity to review a variety of topics relating to our thoughts about cancer and nutrition. What they do with that information is totally up to them but at least they will be more informed about the subject,” explains Gonzalez.

“Although many of the video interviews are free of medical jargon so that they can be easily understood by the average layperson, there are some videos of my presentations to fellow professionals. These videos offer more complex viewing for fellow doctors as well as the more adventurous layperson.”

About Dr. Nicholas Gonzalez

Nicholas Gonzalez, M.D., graduated from Brown University, in Providence, Rhode Island, Phi Beta Kappa, Magna Cum Laude, with a Degree in English Literature. He subsequently worked as a Journalist, first at Time Inc., before pursuing premedical studies at Columbia University in New York City. He then received his Medical Degree from Cornell University Medical College, New York City, in 1983.

During a postgraduate Immunology Fellowship under Robert A. Good, M.D., Ph.D., considered the father of modern Immunology and for years President of Sloan-Kettering, he completed a research study evaluating the Kelley Nutritional Therapy in the treatment of advanced cancer.

Since 1987, Dr. Gonzalez has been in private practice in New York City, treating patients diagnosed with cancer and other serious degenerative illnesses. His nutritional research has received substantial financial support from the Procter & Gamble Company and from Nestec, Inc. (Nestlé). Results from a pilot study published in 1999 in the journal “Nutrition and Cancer” described the most positive data in the medical literature for pancreatic cancer.
Dr. Gonzalez has released three books. The first, “The Trophoblast and the Origins of Cancer,” discusses from a contemporary perspective John Beard, D.Sc., who 100 years ago first suggested an anti-cancer effect for pancreatic enzymes. The second in the series, “One Man Alone,” presents the results of Dr. Gonzalez’s five-year investigation of William Donald Kelley, D.D.S., completed under the direction of Dr. Good. The third, “What Went Wrong,” documents Dr. Gonzalez’s battle to have his therapy properly tested in an NCI Clinical Study. His books can be ordered through the website www.newspringpress.com.

Dr. Gonzalez may be contacted at his clinic in New York City by phone 212-213-3337, fax 212-213-3414 and website www.dr-gonzalez.com.

Nicholas Gonzalez MD
36A East 36th Street Suite 204
New York City, New York 10016
(212) 213-3337
(Email)
www.dr-gonzalez.com/