The Annie Appleseed Project's 8th annual cancer conference is coming. On March 6-8, 2014, the 8th annual CAM Conference will be held at the West Palm Beach Embassy's Suites. At the conference, the Annie Appleseed Project will present evidence based and alternative cancer therapies. Their theme will be Many Paths to Wellness.

The conference will highlight both evidence based approaches to cancer, as well as alternative therapies. The Friday keynote speaker at the event will be Keith Block He will be presenting integrative approaches to molecular target therapy. On Saturday the keynote speaker will be Michael Schachter, who will be discussing controversial issues in preventing and managing cancer.

There will be a plethora of other presenters as well. They range from practitioners, to researchers, to cancer survivors. The issues and ideas which they will address include new research, new ideas, the prevention of cancer, and more homeopathic treatments. A wide range of ideas and viewpoints will be available to all of those who attend.

Registration for the event is still open. The cost to attend the event is only $249 and is all inclusive. The meals will be organic. There will be access to all exhibitors, plus there is a reusable giveaway bag with items that you will find both interesting and of value.

The conference directors have arranged a group discount at the West Palm Beach Embassy's Suites. The cost for a single King bed or two queen beds is only $169. These rooms are all small suites and do include a refrigerator and microwave. The cost is only until the block is sold out, though. As March is often peak season for the warmer states, the price will be significantly more after the block is full so it is imperative to book early to get in on the deal. The link to book the hotel, and to make sure you are included in the block discount, is on the registration's home page.

The cancer conference will begin on March 6, 2014 at 2:00pm and will go until 5:00pm on March 8, 2014. Along with the giveaway bags, there will be a prize drawing during these days and wonderful networking opportunities. If, however, you find that you can not attend all three days of the conference, you can attend on just Saturday or Sunday for only $100 each. If you attend just Thursday night, it will be $49. However, with the great variety of exhibitors and speakers who will be presenting, it would be ideal to arrange your calendar to make sure that you can attend the entire conference. It would be well worth the time and effort to come and enjoy it. To learn more please visit <http://www.annieappleseedproject.org/>
