Find out How One Phoenix Doctor is Giving Patients Back the Bodies of Their Youth. Dr. Robert Meger will be having a Coolsculpting event on Oct 01, 2014 from 4-7 pm to discuss the procedure.

(Newswire.net -- September 9, 2014) Phoenix , AZ -- Coolsculpting has been gaining a stronger foot hold in the last couple of years, this is mainly due to the FDA clearing it as a non-surgical or invasive procedure for fat reduction located on the midsection area. In addition to the growing popularity of the new method of freezing away fat, doctors state that the method in the reduction of fat reduction in other areas of the body as well, this has led to a rising desire to have the procedure performed by patients across the country.

The method was cleared by the FDA all the way back in 2010 but as usual it takes some time to see something like this spread and gain acceptance as a reliable method of destroying fat. The method has proven itself and patients are now seeking it as a safe alternative to other more invasive surgeries. It is specifically being sought after as a way to reduce the stubborn fat found around the flanks commonly referred to as love handles.

Coolsculpting in Phoenix AZ works by applying an intense cold to the desired areas of the body which are considered problem areas by the patients. The skin and fat are suctioned between two plates and then the fat is blasted with extreme cold, and as being more susceptible than other areas of the body begins to die and fall away over the next two – three months. This can result in as much as 25% of the fat in the affected area to disappear. In time the company who designed the technology ZELTIQ will hopefully be developing plates for each part of the body.

Doctors with experience in body contouring methods can use the procedure in off label ways, and patients are recommended to ask their doctors about what areas they can have the treatment done on. This may be the best option for a patient seeking to reduce fat from specific areas of the body without having the invasive procedures of liposuction or abdominal wall surgery performed.
