(Newswire.net -- October 30, 2014) Pompano Beach, FL -- Trying to find the right brand of sunscreen face and body, whether you have sensitive skin, oily skin or normal skin, can be a little tricky.

There are so many products on the market with various kinds of ingredients that can either have a negative or positive effect on the skin. The last thing you would want to do is to choose a sunscreen that leaves you with rashes on the skin. Here are some of the things to consider when choosing the right sunscreen.

Always check the SPF ratings before buying. The SPF rating on the bottle acts as a rating system to tell how effective the product will be against the sun UV rays. It's best to choose a sunscreen with SPF 30 and over especially for those person who spend more than two hours in the sun on a daily basis.

The rays of the sun are divided into three layers, the UVA, UVB and UVC layer. Choose a broad spectrum sunscreen that protects the skin against UVA and UVB rays of the sun.

Before buying any sunscreen face and body products make sure to read the label on the bottle. An understanding of the ingredients that makes up a particular sunscreen can help in deciding if the sunscreen is right for a particular skin type. Some sunscreen might use certain ingredients that can give off an allergic reaction.

For persons with oily or acne prone skin, it is best to choose a sunscreen that is water based.

Think about the type of activities that one will be part taking in. If the beach is the next destination consider using a water resistant sunscreen. Sunscreens are never truly waterproof. Eventually the sunscreen will wear off so a good water based sunscreen should do the trick for persons heading to the beach or to the pool.

Know that the cost of the sunscreen doesn’t always determine the effectiveness of the sunscreen. A sunscreen can be expensive but still not good as a more affordable priced sunscreen.

Always check the expiration date on the sunscreen. An expired sunscreen won't be as effective.
