Cate's™ Garden introduces new design for garden knee pads in time for 2015 Spring planting, with extra-long Neoprene straps, reinforced stitching and water- and weather-resistant Neoprene covering for extra comfort and durability.

(Newswire.net -- January 5, 2015) Walnut, CA -- Cate's Garden introduces a new design of knee pads to complement its product line of home gardening products just in time for the 2015 Spring planting season.

After researching customer complaints with garden knee pads in addition to our own real life field testing, Cate's Garden worked with designers to address the top concerns before introducing their own contribution to the marketplace.

The product is the brainchild of company co-founder Chris Molnar.

"I've been gardening all my adult life, and the one thing I've never really been able to achieve was comfort for my knees," explains Molnar. "When we opened Cate's Garden, one thing we discovered was that others had exactly the same dilemma: pain and discomfort when kneeling to do garden chores. So I decided I was going to find the best, most comfortable way to put ease on the knees."

With that goal in mind, Cate's Garden Ultra-Comfort Knee Pads were born.

"I put these to the test before I decided to add them to the Cate's Garden lineup," says Molnar. "Working on both soft and frost-hardened soil at various times – in other words, throughout the gardening year - I found that these pads are truly the most comfortable and durable I've come across, for the best cost option."

According to Cate's Garden, the new design of knee pads incorporate all the following benefits, the combination of which makes this a unique product for home gardeners:

- 3/4" thick EPE (expanded polyethylene) foam for the ultimate in support, comfort and durability.
- Extra-long straps to accommodate any knee size, with two straps per pad for a no-slip fit.
- Soft and durable reinforced design including extra-secure double-stitching.
- An extra long-life, water-resistant Neoprene covering.

"One misconception we had when we tested other products, was that all knee pads would provide proper support and a cushiony feel," explains Molnar. "But what we found, is that many knee pads are either tough but non-flexible, or are flexible but don't feel soft enough to really protect your knees from pain when kneeling," further reveals Chris. "It isn't easy to find both options in one pad, especially at an economical price point. Ours are designed both for protection and comfort. Because of the soft Neoprene straps, they don't cut into your legs when bending."

The knee pads are also designed to be ruggedly constructed and easy to clean. "The pads have reinforced double-stitching, and they're made of Neoprene and EPE, two materials that stand the test of time," Molnar says. "And cleaning is easy. They can be machine-washed on a gentle cycle, or hand-washed. Then hang them to dry."
