(Newswire.net -- March 10, 2015) -- Chella Diaz an author, speaker, and educator who spent 20 years working in the banking and finance industry. She now focuses her time, talent, and energy helping young people get a basic understanding of how to manage their money. To do this she has written two books, "Keys to your Destiny" and "Money Bootcamp: Financial Literacy for Teens". She also offers online financial literacy training. She's passionate about helping young people to seize control of future and make sure it's bright and comfortable financially through goal setting and proper planning.

For Chella Diaz, her career in finance and banking began as an Underwriter reviewing real estate loans. After 20 years she began working with Home Savings of America reviewing REO appraisals. After a little over 6 years she became a vice president of Quality Control. The job required her to review suspicious activity on accounts which had been filed with the FBI. Her experience in banking and finance enabled her to develop a wide range of valuable skills. It gave her an understanding of mortgage lending and underwriting, loan origination, loan refinancing, real estate, loss mitigation, credit analysis, and customer service.

Her overall experience in banking and finance also taught her two very important things. One was how misinformed many people are when it comes to managing money. The other was that the best way for people to learn basic money management skills is to begin when they're young. So she combined her knowledge and experience with her belief in the need for young people to learn how to manage money and wrote Money Boot Camp. It is a book designed to teach financial literacy to teens. The book covers the importance of goal setting, saving, smart shopping, and keeping track of your spending.

To further empower teens and prepare them to make better financial decisions to help give them more control of their money, she wrote Keys to Your Destiny. This book contains invaluable information that can help teens learn the building blocks for creating a bright financial future. She also became the director and CEO of Money Map 101. They help young people understand how to adjust and adapt their financial plans when unexpected things happen. She also founded a non-profit called Money Basics 101, a course which helps teens understand how making educated financial decisions lead to a wealthy life.

A little over 3 years ago Chella Diaz founded MoneyIQ901, a consumer services organization in the Greater Los Angeles area. Through this organization she gives people easy to understand tools to help people better handle credit card debt, take the stress out of paying bills, and achieve financial success. She also has an online program, www.debtfree123.us. Through the show she helps people pay off their mortgage and all other types of debt in 1/2 to 1/3 the time it would normally take.

Chella also created a game called, "Keys to your Destiny". It lets young people have fun while teaching them to live within their budget and manage their money. Money Boot Camp teaches teens about credit cards, banks, need versus wants, how money works, good spending habits, how to write a check, and steps to making their first million. Together with Money IQ 901, these programs teach frugal living and practical money management skills to help young people live within their means, stretch a dollar, improve their credit, and begin preparing for a fantastic life.

Chella Diaz has also helped many people quickly eliminate credit card debt, create emergency accounts, and save up the down payment for their house in 24 months or less.
