

High Tech Safety Discusses Use of Pepper Spray In Self-Defense

Tyler Collins July 09, 2015

High Tech Safety expert Manny Alvarado discusses the use of non-lethal pepper spray to prevent an attack.

(Newswire.net -- July 9, 2015) Murfreesboro, TN --A Kentucky teenager made the news recently when she confronted her attacker with pepper spray, escaping from a potentially dangerous situation and fleeing to safety. The young woman told police that she got into a vehicle with a man who told her he was assigned to pick her up from school, but then began molesting her. The girl used pepper spray that she carried in her backpack to fight off her attacker and was able to run from the vehicle to a nearby home. The man was arrested and charged with kidnap and sexual abuse.

For more information on this news story see <http://www.lex18.com/story/29473536/authorities-teen-pepper-sprays-man-who-kidnapped-molested-her>.

According to High Tech Safety expert Manny Alvarado, the young woman's story is all too common. "Many rapists and molesters win the trust of their victims before attempting their crimes," says Alvarado. "This means that they often place themselves physically close to the person they are going to attack. Because molestation is a crime that takes place in close proximity to the victim, mace or pepper spray may actually be more effective than some other weapons if a friendly person suddenly turns menacing."

High Tech Safety offers mace for sale as seen at <http://www.hightechsafety.com/> as well as a wide range of stun guns and pepper spray for sale. All products are non-lethal and are designed for personal protection in a variety of situations. For more information, visit the company website.

About High Tech Safety: High Tech Safety is a company dedicated to providing the best non-lethal safety alternatives on the market. With high-quality and affordable stun guns, pepper spray, mace and personal or home safety devices, this company offers the best selection at the lowest possible prices on everything needed to keep customers and their families safe.

For More Information:

Manny Alvarado

High Tech Safety

2441-Q Old Fort Pkwy #374

Murfreesboro, TN 37128

United States

(615) 438-5734

info@HighTechSafety.com

Source: <http://newswire.net/newsroom/pr/00089424-high-tech-safety-discusses-pepper-spray-self-defense.html>