Los Angeles, CA -- High school students as well as student athletes who wish to become eligible for scholarships and or go to college can count on the expertise and individualized attention LanguageBird, LLC, provides with their unique online foreign language courses. LanguageBird specializes in providing live, interactive online instruction using native speakers who are also highly qualified to teach, ensuring a quality experience and true learning possibilities. The courses taught online are accredited by the University of California and by the NCAA, giving students the chance to remain eligible for Divisions 1 and 2 college competition. "Our flexible, interactive learning environment resonates with students," says Dr. Karyn Koven, founder and director of the language instruction school. "The approval by the University of California and the NCAA is an additional feature representing our commitment to quality education for foreign language students." Based in Los Angeles, California, the company strives to offer a fresh take on traditional high school foreign language classes. By providing personalized, flexible, interactive instruction in an online learning environment, students can be exposed to the full range of language learning experiences. LanguageBird courses are unique as the only college-prep approved online courses taught by a live, real-time instructor. "Students get the most practice speaking with their private instructor. Taking our courses is like going abroad without the need to travel," says Dr. Koven. "It's a unique experience that includes learning about the people and the culture of the instructors' home countries." The equivalent of one full year of traditional classroom instruction is compressed into 24 hours of personalized, flexible online coursework, preparing students for college admissions eligibility, foreign travel, future employment, or just as a means of personal enrichment. Students may also take 12 hour courses, which represent a full semester of traditional instruction. Students completing the highest levels of foreign language courses offered by LanguageBird have a better chance of being accepted into the top colleges, thanks to the intensive language preparation they receive at the hands of expert educators.

The company is so confident in their instruction methods they offer free trial lessons for prospective students and their families. A number of incentives are offered, such as Facebook discounts and referral credits, helping make the courses even more affordable. The interactive, rich learning experience is a welcome change from traditional classroom instruction, and students report greater satisfaction with the company's Spanish-language lessons.
