Citizen attitudes are undergoing a seismic shift.

Medical marijuana delivery service, Tops Cannabis, discusses the ramifications of America's changing attitudes.

(Newswire.net -- December 5, 2016) Huntington Beach, California -- In the United States, a sea of change is taking place in regards to attitudes surrounding legal use of cannabis. Recreational and medical marijuana legalization legislation has appeared on several state ballots in the recent election season, and a majority of Americans now support efforts to legalize the plant, according to several studies. Tops Cannabis, a leading medical marijuana delivery service in Orange and Los Angeles Counties, is excited by the groundswell of support for legalization initiatives. "Voters across the country are sending a message that the era of marijuana prohibition is over," says a spokesperson for the California-based delivery service. "Fast-forwarding from just a handful of states where medical marijuana was legal to today's legalization climate has been nothing short of breathtaking." 53% of U.S. citizens polled in a 2016 survey indicated that they supported the legalization of marijuana. This number is contrasted with the percentage of people in 2006 that supported legalization efforts; in that year, only 32% of respondents supported marijuana legalization. In a similar survey conducted in 2013, over 77% of people supported legalizing medical marijuana in the U.S. Even the Surgeon General of the United States has indicated that medical marijuana shows great promise for helping to treat a number of serious medical conditions. Changing attitudes cross age, race, and political barriers as well. Among the most vocal supporters of legalization efforts include both Democratic and Republican politicians from state and federal governments. Grandparents who have seen their grandchildren's health improve with medical cannabis have lent their support. Physicians and healthcare providers have joined in on decriminalization and legalization initiatives. Even law enforcement officials across the country have grown weary of fighting the War on Drugs and have begun to speak out on behalf of legalization. "It is an exciting time for the medical and recreational marijuana industries," adds the spokesperson.
