(Newswire.net -- July 11, 2017) Orlando, FL -- Acid reflux is a chronic health problem, but is not considered life-threatening. However, it can be extremely troublesome and this is why it needs to be addressed. There are medications available, but there are also natural alternatives found to be potentially useful against the condition.

Activated charcoal is believed to work wonders in fighting acid reflux. This natural alternative has a long history of health-based use, and has been found to offer a range of health benefits.

According to some experts, indigestion or stomach upset could potentially cause heartburn, which eventually leads to acid reflux. The development of this condition may result in symptoms such as pain and discomfort in the abdomen or chest, especially after a meal.

Individuals who suffer from acid reflux are more likely to suffer from dyspepsia. This condition is characterized by a burning feeling that affects the center of the chest. This burning feeling is produced by the reflux of the stomach contents that flows back up to the esophagus, which is a process that results in heartburn.

Heartburn, especially when it gets severe, is often mistaken as a heart attack. This condition could potentially lead to nausea, vomiting, flatulence, burping, belching, and loss of appetite.

According to statistics, 20% of the population experiences heartburn at least once a week. The symptoms have been found to vary according to the reason why heartburn develops in the first place. Some symptoms are temporary while others affect sufferers on a long-term basis.

It is essential to avoid triggers such as the consumption of spicy or greasy food. Hurried eating and consuming meals on irregular schedules are also discouraged. Some experts also recommend the use of an activated charcoal formula, which many people find to be helpful.

This natural alternative is believed to work by adsorbing excessive acid in the stomach quickly. It may have the ability to bind with irritating substances released from the half-digested contents of the stomach.

While there are pharmaceutical drugs available, it may be safest to use natural alternatives such as activated charcoal. It is worth mentioning that many medications could cause some adverse effects, which can even be far more troublesome than acid reflux.

Divine Bounty’s activated charcoal formula may be an excellent choice. This carefully-crafted formula is highly potent and pure, and is popularized by its potential ability to deliver the natural goodness of activated charcoal.

This amazing formula is even backed with a complete customer satisfaction guarantee, which provides consumers the chance to receive a full refund should they not be completely satisfied with their purchase.
