(Newswire.net -- September 27, 2017) Orlando, FL -- Maintaining a healthy heart requires many things, and it includes nourishing the body with certain nutrients such as antioxidants. Resveratrol is one of these antioxidants, and it is a widely studied natural ingredient in the world today.

Resveratrol may potentially reduce the risk of artery damage and heart disease. This antioxidant can be found in red wine and other plant-based sources. It has been found to be helpful for heart health in some studies, due to the antioxidants it contains.

According to some experts, it may potentially enhance the levels of good cholesterol and even offer protection against artery damage. Experts have speculated that both resveratrol and flavonoids may offer heart health benefits.

In some research studies, it was found that red wine may be the most beneficial when compared to any other alcoholic beverages in producing a healthy heart.

The main ingredient that has been found helpful in reducing blood vessel damage is resveratrol. Some studies also indicate that it may be useful in reducing bad cholesterol and blood clots. Many research studies were conducted to see the effects of this antioxidant by testing it on animals.

It was concluded by researchers that in mice, resveratrol protected the subject animals from obesity as well as diabetes. These two conditions are high risk factors of heart disease.

More studies are still underway to determine if the possible inflammation-fighting and blood-clot reducing effects of resveratrol are applicable to humans. It is also worth mentioning that inflammation and blood clots may also lead to heart disease.

While drinking red wine in moderation is a way to obtain the potential benefits of resveratrol, it can also be done through the use of Purest Vantage’s resveratrol formula, which is gaining an increasing interest among consumers.
