(Newswire.net -- June 6, 2019) Orlando, FL -- It is hard to deny that diabetes is a condition that makes daily life more difficult and far from normal. Unfortunately, it is not only alarming due to its incurability, but also because of its complications.

Health authorities warn these complications can affect various parts of the body. Some may simply be mild discomfort while others are severe enough to be considered extremely serious.

These dangers can occur and wreak havoc on health when diabetes is not managed properly. One of the complications of this condition is gum disease and cavities.

Gum disease and cavities are often considered to be one of the first signs of diabetes. Sufferers are advised to follow the right dental hygiene.

Eyesight issues may take place due to diabetes unmanaged well. One is diabetic neuropathy, which is characterized by the damage in the blood vessels in the retina. Damage may be due to high blood sugar levels.

There are other eyesight issues like cataracts and glaucoma. Some other complications are nerve damage, foot problems, strokes, heart disease, and some skin conditions. It is important to take the diabetes medications as prescribed to manage it better.

Some natural remedies have been found useful in helping to prevent diabetes, and one is chromium.

In some studies, it has been found the use of chromium supplements for 4 months significantly reduced levels of blood sugar and cholesterol.

“Prior human studies have suggested that chromium picolinate decreases insulin levels and improves blood sugar metabolism in both obese people and people with type 2 diabetes,” says Associate Professor of Medicine at University of Vermont.

According to Richard Anderson several studies using chromium picolinate supplementation for impaired glucose intolerance and diabetes showed a positive effect.

Anderson is from the US Department of Agriculture, and he seconded the positive assessment of Chromium.

Chromium has long been known to be highly therapeutic. It has even been a popular subject of many studies and clinical trials due to its remarkable healing potentials.

This healing ingredient is so essential that it is even found in various supplements, such as Divine Bounty Men’s Multivitamins.
