(Newswire.net -- June 12, 2019) Orlando, FL -- The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention warns that in the United States, there are around 30 million people who suffer from chronic kidney disease (CKD).

Researchers have been carrying out studies to explore the scientifically-proven ways to enhance and protect the kidneys. It is important to be warned that according to statistics, 96 percent of individuals with early kidney disease are unaware of their condition.

According to Kevin Longino, CEO, National Kidney Foundation and a kidney transplant patient, let these new statistics from CDC serve as a warning bell that a major public health challenge is right in front of our eyes and more must be done to address it.

There are all-natural ways to take better care of the kidneys and enhance their protection against diseases. It has been found that a healthful, well-balanced diet may aid in keeping the kidneys to work smoothly.

The National Kidney Foundation (NKF) recommends increasing water intake. It is wise to keep urine either light yellow or colorless.

It is similarly important to consume more fruits and vegetables, which particularly include cauliflower, celery, red peppers, cabbage, cucumber, and eggplant.

Experts have been recommending the use of natural remedies like activated charcoal to promote the functions of the kidneys.

It is worth mentioning that in some studies, activated charcoal has been found to work wonders in helping eliminate the number of waste products the kidneys are designed to filter. This means that it could enhance the ability of the organ to function.

Experts say that through this therapeutic action, activated charcoal may be useful for individuals with chronic kidney disease.

Chronic kidney disease is a condition in which the kidneys can no longer properly filter waste products. It has further been found activated charcoal may work in binding with the urea and some other toxins, which are then eliminated by the body.

Taking advantage of the healing goodness of this natural remedy may be made through the use of Divine Bounty Activated Charcoal.
